Background & Personal Details

The overhead view remoted to her vision by the Optic-X2 told Jericho all she needed to know about the pursuit.

Semi-reclined, her body strapped in to the seat by the five point harness, her face betrayed none of the elation she felt. The heavy diesel of the Armadillo snarled in response to her demands on the throttle, and horns blatted in her wake as she muscled her way through traffic.

had speed and size on their side, but clearly they did not know who they were messing with. Jericho ducked across two lanes of traffic, snaking her way in between a heavy Roadmaster and the jersey barrier to take the exit ramp. She bootlegged off the ramp, tires squealing and smoking before finding purchase and sending her hurtling back towards the mouth of the ramp just in time to meet the two Americars as they exited.

dodging right and then left in front of her. Jericho kept the throttle wide open, slinking to the left to let her truck miss the car by centimeters. The car shot across the street, hitting the raised median while still doing seventy kph. Both front tires blew out at the impact, while the concrete lip tore the oil pan off the bottom of the engine. The second Americar was luckier, weaving to the right before jamming on its brakes in a bootleg turn of its own.

the sensor package in its belly faithfully transmitting a bird's eye view of the pursuit back through the network to her. Her commlink buzzed, the incoming call tagged with her fixer's ID.

view again, weighing it against the distance to Riley's favorite bar. This time, a vicious grin did spread across her lips. "I can be there in twenty minutes."
